ASHRAE Building Energy Auditing

Energy audits are the first step in identifying if a building's capital expenses can be reduced. Level 1 energy audit is the most commonly used to quickly identify energy usage between similar buildings. In the case where property managers can easily access data from multiple buildings and energy analysis can easily determine which building needs to have a further analysis to correct and restore energy systems operation to the intent design. If a level 2 or level 3 energy audit is required, more in-depth engineering energy analysis will determine whether a retro-commissioning is a solution or upgrades and replacement of target equipment is required.

Galicia commissioning group, Inc. partners with utility companies like PG and E and California Edison to implement state and federal grants, for those that qualify, for a free energy studied or retro-commissioning.
